"We switched our payroll to Farm Credit East."

Tom Osborne

"Tom made the switch to save costs, but it turned out to be more convenient, too. He likes to enter his employee hours online, which he can do any time of day or night. Then we take care of everything else — delivering payroll on time, filing payroll taxes, dealing with exemptions. He never has to scramble to get people paid or find payroll reports. Call Farm Credit East and we’ll do the same for you."

Farmers Seek Tax Relief

By TIM FAULKNER/ecoRI News staff

PROVIDENCE — Several generations of farmers spoke in favor of a bill (S 18) to help reduce the tax burden for passing land to family members.

Bill Stamp Jr. of Stamp Farms in Cranston and North Kingstown noted that agriculture is a small but growing industry in the state, but most farmers are getting older. “Agriculture is gaining, but now we have to pass it on to the next generation.”

“We want to continue doing what we do best,” his son Bill Stamp III said at the Jan. 29 Statehouse hearing. Under current state law the first $1 million of farmland is appraised as agricultural use, which is lower than the “full and fair-cash value” or its value as new homes or commercial real estate.

“If we keep appraising our farmland as house lots, you know what’s going to happen? They are going to become house lots,” said Alfred Bettencourt Jr., executive director of the Rhode Island Farm Bureau.

After the hearing, Ken Ayars, chief of the state Division of Agriculture, said state officials have taken an interest in the issue and are studying the tax implications. The governor is expected to make an announcement on this and related bills as the legislative session moves ahead, he said.

Ayars noted that as much as 10 percent of Rhode Island is farmland, much of it valuable coastal property and sought after by real-estate developers. “Farmers are typically land rich and cash poor, so sometimes they have to sell the land to pay taxes,” he said.

To help farmers plan for estate tax issues, the Division of Agriculture is co-hosting a tax workshop for farmers in early March.

David Cotta, 71, co-owner of Quonset View Farm in Portsmouth, hopes the taxes will be lowered before he bequeaths his 140-acre farm to his grandson Mike Flynn, an agricultural student at the University of Rhode Island. Cotta was one of several farmers who noted that the pay can be poor, but the work is rewarding. “We really need agriculture in Rhode Island and the country. It’s a wonderful thing,” he said. But help is needed for family farming to endure. “Without this bill it will put me behind the eight ball,” Flynn said.

Tyler Young, of Young Family Farm in Little Compton said he buys used farm equipment, which he repairs himself. Fertilizers are expensive, he said. And crops like his potatoes have good years and bad. “We just don’t want to get to the point where we can’t function,” he said.

The bill was held for further study by the Senate Finance Committee. Editor’s Note: However, Senator Felag moved passage and several senators agreed. But Chairman DaPonte held it and asked Al Bettencourt to get more info from the Sales Tax Division as to how much it would cost. Since 2009, no farmers have paid an estate tax. Stay tuned.
RICAPE and its Director Stu Nunnery have completed a six part series of training video programs for farmers engaged in agritourism. Written and hosted by Nunnery, the videos were produced in partnership with First Priority Media of Cranston and funded through a Rural Business Enterprise Grant (RBEG) and a Specialty Crop Block Grant – both from USDA. The series will be launched February 27th in a workshop hosted by Nunnery at the Harvest New England Ag Marketing Conference and Trade Show to be held in Sturbridge, MA. In March the videos will be available on the New England FarmWays website and via other broadcast sources along with other web-based materials to assist farm operators to launch or expand their agritourism destinations and enterprises.

DoD FRESH DOUBLES RI GROWN PRODUCE FROM 2011 TO 2012!

Rhode Island Grown produce amounts in the DoD Fresh program doubled from the 2011 harvest to the 2012 harvest. Between September and December of 2011, RI schools received about $15,000 in RI Grown produce through the program, compared to about $31,000 for the same time frame in 2012, as reported by the US Department of Defense.

AT Siravo of Cranston, the contracted vendor for the DoD Fresh program in the New England region, sourced RI Grown apples from Pippin Orchards and RI Grown vegetables from Confreda Farms.

KIDS FIRST BIDS A "FUND" FAREWELL TO RI FARM TO SCHOOL

Kids First, Rhode Island Farm to School's first home and launch pad, officially closed in June of 2012. RI Farm to School started as an idea there in 1999, and over the course of twelve years grew to include education and cafeteria programs in all 36 public school districts. When Kids First achieved it's mission to "Guide Communities to Improve the Nutritional and Physical Well Being of Children and Their Families", on-going programs transitioned to other agencies and non-profits. RI Farm to School was adopted by Farm Fresh RI, Rhode Island's premier agricultural advocacy organization.

Kids First recently bequeathed a gift of $10,000 to Farm Fresh RI's Farm to School project. The funds shall be used for classroom education programs, cafeteria celebrations of locally grown foods, after school programs, gardening programs and farm field trips. Thank you Kids First, for nurturing a program that supports health of RI farms, students, our communities and environments!

Check out Farm Fresh RI's new Farm to School website for more information.

Sales Tax on Plants:

There seems to be some confusion on whether or not farmers should collect a sales tax on vegetable plants. The answer is YES!

However, if you sell the plants to a fellow farmer who has a sales tax exempt certificate, you do not have to collect the tax.

NO FARMERS NO FOOD
As spring planting nears, it’s important to make sure your farm equipment is in top working condition. Having a breakdown can be costly in two important ways: the bill for replacing the broken part(s) and the time lost in the field. There are certain precautions a farmer can take before, during and after the season to keep equipment in optimum working condition, such as conducting a pre-season maintenance review or taking equipment to a local dealer for inspection.

Performing regular maintenance will not always prevent breakdowns in the field, but by following these suggestions, you can make them less likely.

• Read the operator’s manual.
• Conduct maintenance properly.
• Keep electrical connections dry and free of debris.
• Do not overestimate the operating capacity of your equipment.
• Replace worn parts before they become broken parts.
• Store equipment in appropriate shelters.
• Do not let an untrained person operate the equipment.
• Do not ignore warning signals that say something is wrong.
• Try not to operate machinery in less than optimal weather conditions, which can put a real strain on the equipment.

It’s also critical to complete maintenance in a safe manner. Remember the following:

• Avoid improper lifting.
• Keep all tools in good working condition.
• Take extra precaution when making hydraulic system repairs. Use paper or cardboard, not a hand, to find a leak.
• Use the right tool for the right job.
• Make sure all equipment is turned off and stabilized and that chocks are placed under the wheels to prevent rolling.
• Never climb under a vehicle or piece of equipment on a jack unless it is properly secured with blocks or jackstands.
• Pay extra attention to heavy or sharp objects. They’re essential to farming operations but can cause serious bodily harm.
• Make sure all tools have proper safety shields.
• Keep the work area clean, and practice safe habits when working.
• Wear protective clothing and safety gear.
• Train family members and workers to have safe work habits.
• Educate novices helping with repairs and maintenance prior to their participation.

And remember, do not hurry. Most accidents happen when people rush and do not think through what they are about to do. Take the time to consider safety and you could reduce your risk of loss or injury. Go to www.farmfamily.com and look at our loss control section for more information on implementing risk management and safety in the workplace.

Our relationship with the Rhode Island Farm Bureau has evolved since 1954, when a farsighted group of farmers decided to form an insurance company by farmers, for farmers. Our leaders continue to work together to address the needs of farmers in the state. Locally, our agents support Farm Bureau members, learning the issues in their farming communities firsthand.

Thank you for making Farm Family your insurer of choice. Together, we will work to protect your farms, business, family and homes.
